Its highest point is the of El Chaparral, near Riaza. It is a popular tourist destination, most notably for its ski resorts. Apart from these, there are also many mountain huts, such as Cerro Azabache or the Casa del Albañil in the village of Azabache. The village itself was built in the 19th century from mostly local materials. An international lorry road and an extensive network of walking paths have been built. There are also many hiking and biking trails. Geology The Sierra Morena is an anticlinal fold. The anticline runs from the south to the north and is part of the Jurassic to Cretaceous development of the Barranco de Río Negro and the Arenosfera (Arenahera). The anticline begins to manifest itself between Serrano and Nava in the sub-basins of the rivers Jarama and Carretera de Pontevedra, respectively, and it extends northwards through the lake of Benacazón. Climate The Sierra Morena is the region with the warmest and wettest climate in Spain, with an average temperature of 11 °C and a precipitation of 2,500 mm. Therefore, it is classified as "temperate Iberian" climate. The average temperature increases from 10 °C to 12 °C in the High mountains. The greatest humidity, on the other hand, reaches 90%. References Category:Sierra MorenaComparing the information on typical anticoagulant management practices provided by a university medical center clinic in the United States and by a state-run anticoagulation clinic in Canada. The use of anticoagulants is widespread in medicine. Due to patient-directed treatment of high-risk conditions, certain patients may require anticoagulation therapy. As a result of increased scrutiny surrounding the efficacy of anticoagulant usage, many hospitals and physicians are opting to educate patients on how to take their anticoagulants
